Campus News

Art professor honored

Art professor Carl Blair has been named Chairman of the Board of the South Carolina Arts Commission. Mr. Blair has been on the BJU art faculty since 1957, and was appointed to the Board by SC governor Carrol Campbell in 1987. In 1995, the Greenville County Museum of Art will organize a traveling 40-year retrospective of Blair's work.

Mr. Blair was also recently accepted into the "Arts in the Embassies" program sponsored by the U.S. State Department. His painting "Bands of October" is on loan to the American Embassy in Cairo, Egypt.

About the Cover

Believe it or not, there's a lot more to college life than just studying! Weekends are full of sports and activities. And of course, as with every sports team, there are cheerleaders stirring up the spirit, cheering their team on to victory, and hamming it up for the camera.

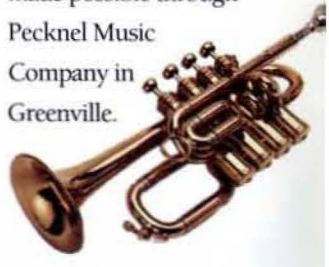
The Unusual Films Photographic Studios have recently joined the PPA and are also now part of the Kodak "Promise of Excellence" Program, through which Kodak guarantees the quality of their materials used in the studios' work. Also, Mr. Paul Shanks of the staff of Unusual Films conceived, organized and published "Michigan—A Professional Photographic Salute," a book depicting a day in the life of Michigan. Creating a multi-image presentation based on the book, he travelled throughout the U.S. and parts of Canada conducting showings.

Music Dept. gets free instruments

The Division of Music is participating in the College Sampler Program this year, sponsored by the Yamaha Music Corporation. Under this program, BJU is given the use of a total of 25 musical instruments, from flutes to tubas, for an entire school year at no cost to the school. BJU's participation is made possible through Pecknel Music Company in Greenville.



Graduate named resident of the year

Mr. Juan Teruel, a 1988 pre-med graduate, was recently awarded the 93-94 First Year Resident of the Year Award at Michigan State University. He has been interning at E.W. Sparrow Hospital in Lansing, Michigan.

English professors published

English professors Dr. Ron Horton and Dr. Luanne Hurst have recently had essays accepted for publication.

Dr. Horton published an essay entitled "Spenser's Farewell to Dido: The Public Turn" in Acts of the Imagination, a commemorative volume to honor the late scholar O.B. Hardison. The essay discusses Edmund Spenser's poem "The Fairie Queene."

Dr. Hurst's essay entitled "Chief Employ of Her Life" will appear in Scribbling Women, a volume containing essays about the influential women in the life of Nathaniel Hawthorne. Her essay deals with Sophia Hawthorne, wife of Nathaniel Hawthorne, showing the contribution Sophia made to his work by making their home a place conducive to study.

Position available

BJU's Data Processing Department is looking for a computer programmer with a background in relational database (preferably Informix), UNIX or PC, and the C programming language. Interested applicants should contact John Burtner, director of Data Processing, at (803) 242-5100, ext. 3851.

Come join us for Bible Conference

Don't miss Bible Conference this year, March 19-24. Guest speakers will include Rev. Charles Flesher, Dr. Robert Kirkland, Dr. Les Ollila, Dr. Ian Paisley, Dr. Ernest Pickering, and Dr. Robert Shelton.

Or join us a week earlier for three performances of Donizetti's Elixir of Love, a delightful comedy brought to life by the Bob Jones University Opera Association, on March 14, 16, and 18.

And prospective students, be sure to mark your calendar for Let's Get Acquainted Days on March 25–27.

REBUILDING
THE CITY

A Haitian immigrant living in New York, playing soccer, and studying architecture–sounds like a story from the archives of Ellis Island and the Statue of Liberty. Well, for Florio Pierre, it doesn't stop there.

Born in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, in 1985, Florio moved to Queens, New York, to join his parents who had immigrated in the 1970s. After graduating from high school, he started to study architecture.

Florio, who had been saved at 14, met BJU grad Matt Recker, who invited him to attend the Inner City Baptist Church in Queens, where Matt was pastoring. Florio did, and under Matt's ministry, he surrendered his life completely to the Lord's will.

"During college, I had prayed that God would use me in any way that He saw fit," Florio says. "It was then that I saw I needed a Christian education to better serve Him."

So Florio traveled to Greenville with Matt to visit BJU. Part of the trip was a service at a local church where Matt preached a message on the need for Christians to minister in New York.

This hit Florio right between the eyes. "The Lord had already shown me the need, but Matt's message convicted me to give my life full time to the ministry," Florio says.

So he decided to come to BJU and enrolled in 1991, majoring in Bible.

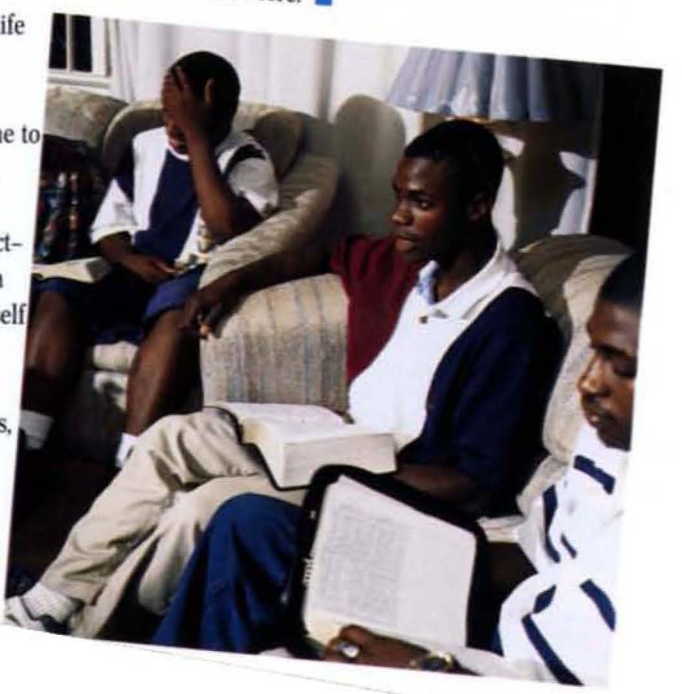
This aspiring architect-turned-Bible student soon found a way to keep himself busy: campus life at BJU. During one semester, he juggled 20 hours of classes, worked both in the dining common and as an usher, and still found time for his number one hobby–soccer.

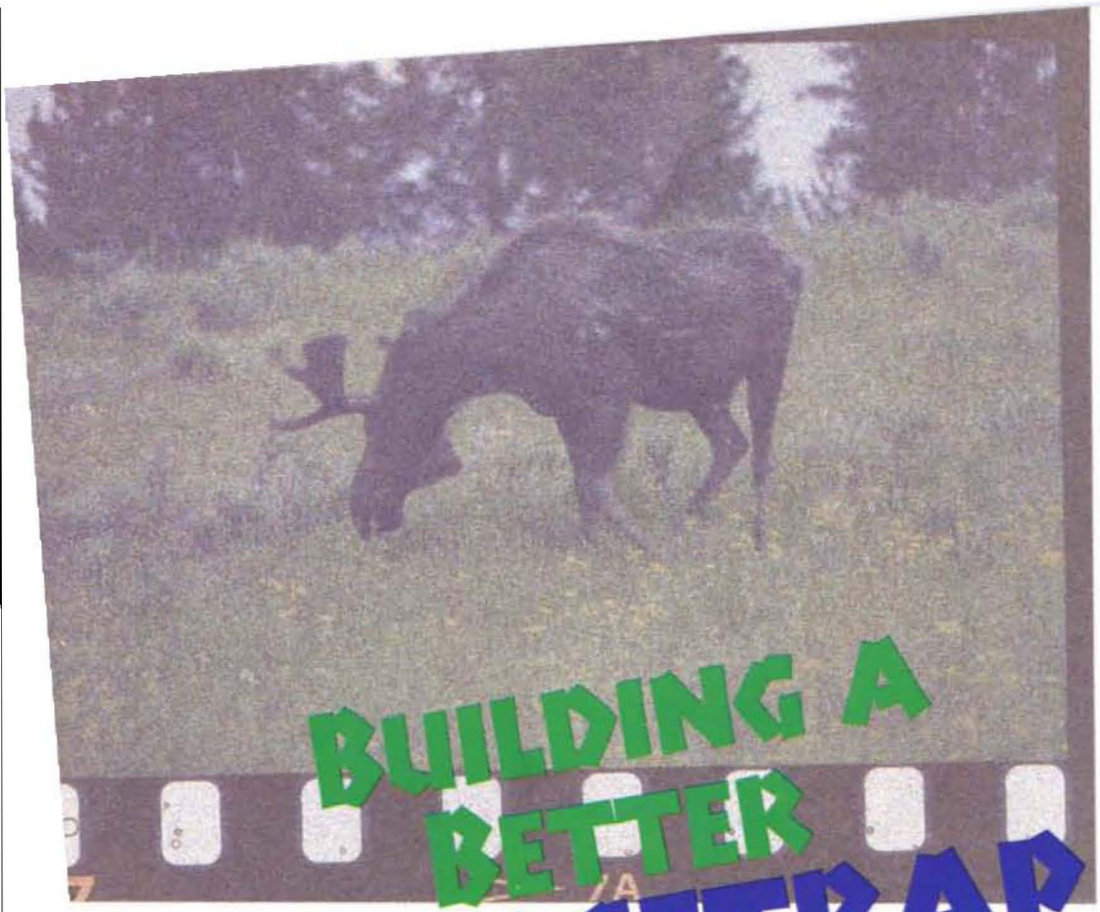
And Florio wasn't waiting to get back to New York to start his "ministry"–he became heavily involved in extension ministries here at BJU. "Since I've been here, I've been on extension almost every week. I've worked with children and teenagers and have seen the Lord do a lot of great things."

And summers don't slow him down either. He's traveled with Neighborhood Bible Time (a team of college students who conduct children's Bible clubs across the country) and with the University's mission team to France.

Florio completed his bachelor's degree this past May and is currently a graduate assistant working on a Master of Divinity degree. After graduation, Florio feels the Lord will lead him into a church planting ministry.

"My burden is always for the city," Florio says. And he hasn't forgotten his roots in his troubled homeland. "Eventually, I believe the Lord will have me go back to Haiti and start a church there." ■





BUILDING A BETTER MOOSETRAP

Ever get frustrated with rabbits who invade your flower garden at night and leave it looking like a Weed-Wacker nightmare? Imagine trying to chase a moose out of your garden. They're a little harder to scare away and their appetites are ferocious. For BJU grad Ron Blough and his family, moose shooing has become part of their every day lives in Alaska.

A father of nine and pastor of a small church, Ron has become very resourceful in finding ways to provide for his family. "It can be expensive to live in Alaska," he says, "but not if you live the way we do. We live on a 'mini farm'. We have had cows, chickens and pigs. We never have to buy meat at the store. We hunt moose, caribou, grouse, and other wild game, and since we're right on the ocean, fish is also abundant."

The Bloughs collect coal from the beaches to heat their house, and they also have a greenhouse in order to provide a longer growing season for the garden. "My wife is very good with wild plants and mushrooms, but she has a tough time keeping the moose out of the garden."

How did the Bloughs end up in Alaska? After Ron graduated from BJU in 1959, he and his wife Marlene moved to Japan. Within a year, they were in Tokyo, pastoring a church for American GIs. Five years later they moved to the fishing village of Hokkaido in northern Japan. There they ministered for twelve years to the small groups of believers that met in their home.

From 1977–1986 they lived in New Hampshire, where Ron was pastor and principal of a church and Christian school. But the family had a real burden for Alaska, and Ron read everything he could find in the library about it. "When the Lord opened the door, we went."

The Bloughs made their home in southeast Alaska from 1986–1989, and Ron worked in commercial fishing and logging, as a school bus driver, and as a substitute teacher. Since December 1989, he has pastored Calvary Baptist Church in Ninilchik on the Kenai Peninsula.

When his children grew up and wanted to attend college, they followed their parents' example by trusting God and working hard. They worked in fish canneries, as cooks on fishing boats, baking bread and pies, as tree surgeons, Japanese interpreters–whatever it took to obtain the money for school.

Of the Blough's nine children, six have earned degrees from BJU. The last two, Judson and Paton, are presently enrolled. And, just like their parents, each of them has had to work and trust the Lord to provide the money.

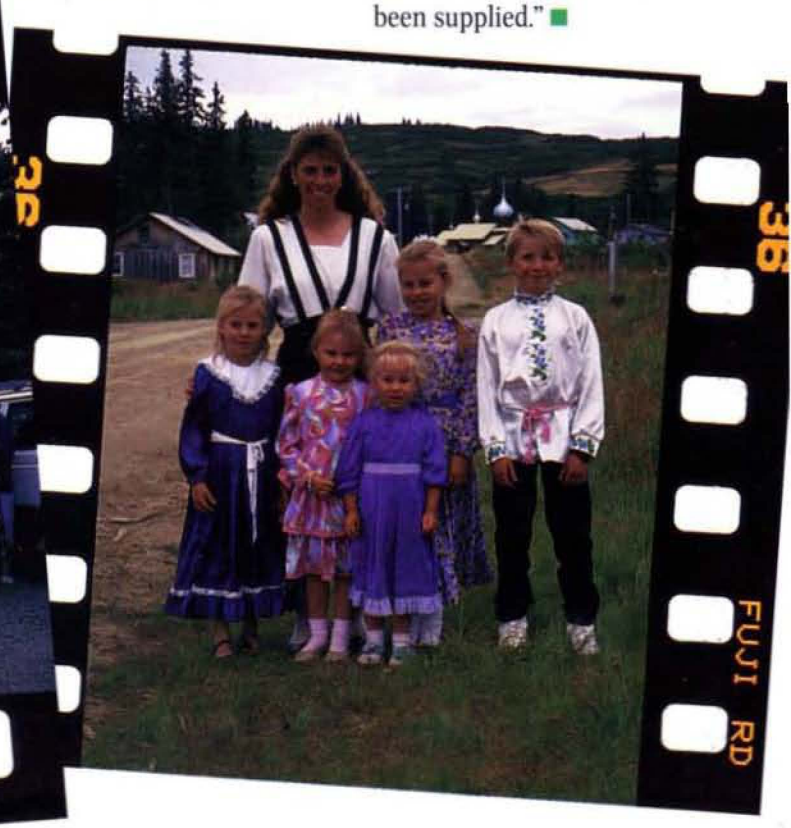
As only one example, Paton was on a herring boat this past summer that didn't catch anything for six weeks. He knew he needed the money from the trip for school, so he asked the Lord to provide.

And provide He did–abundantly. "They caught 270 tons in one night," Ron said. "That was the largest catch most of those fishermen had ever seen!"

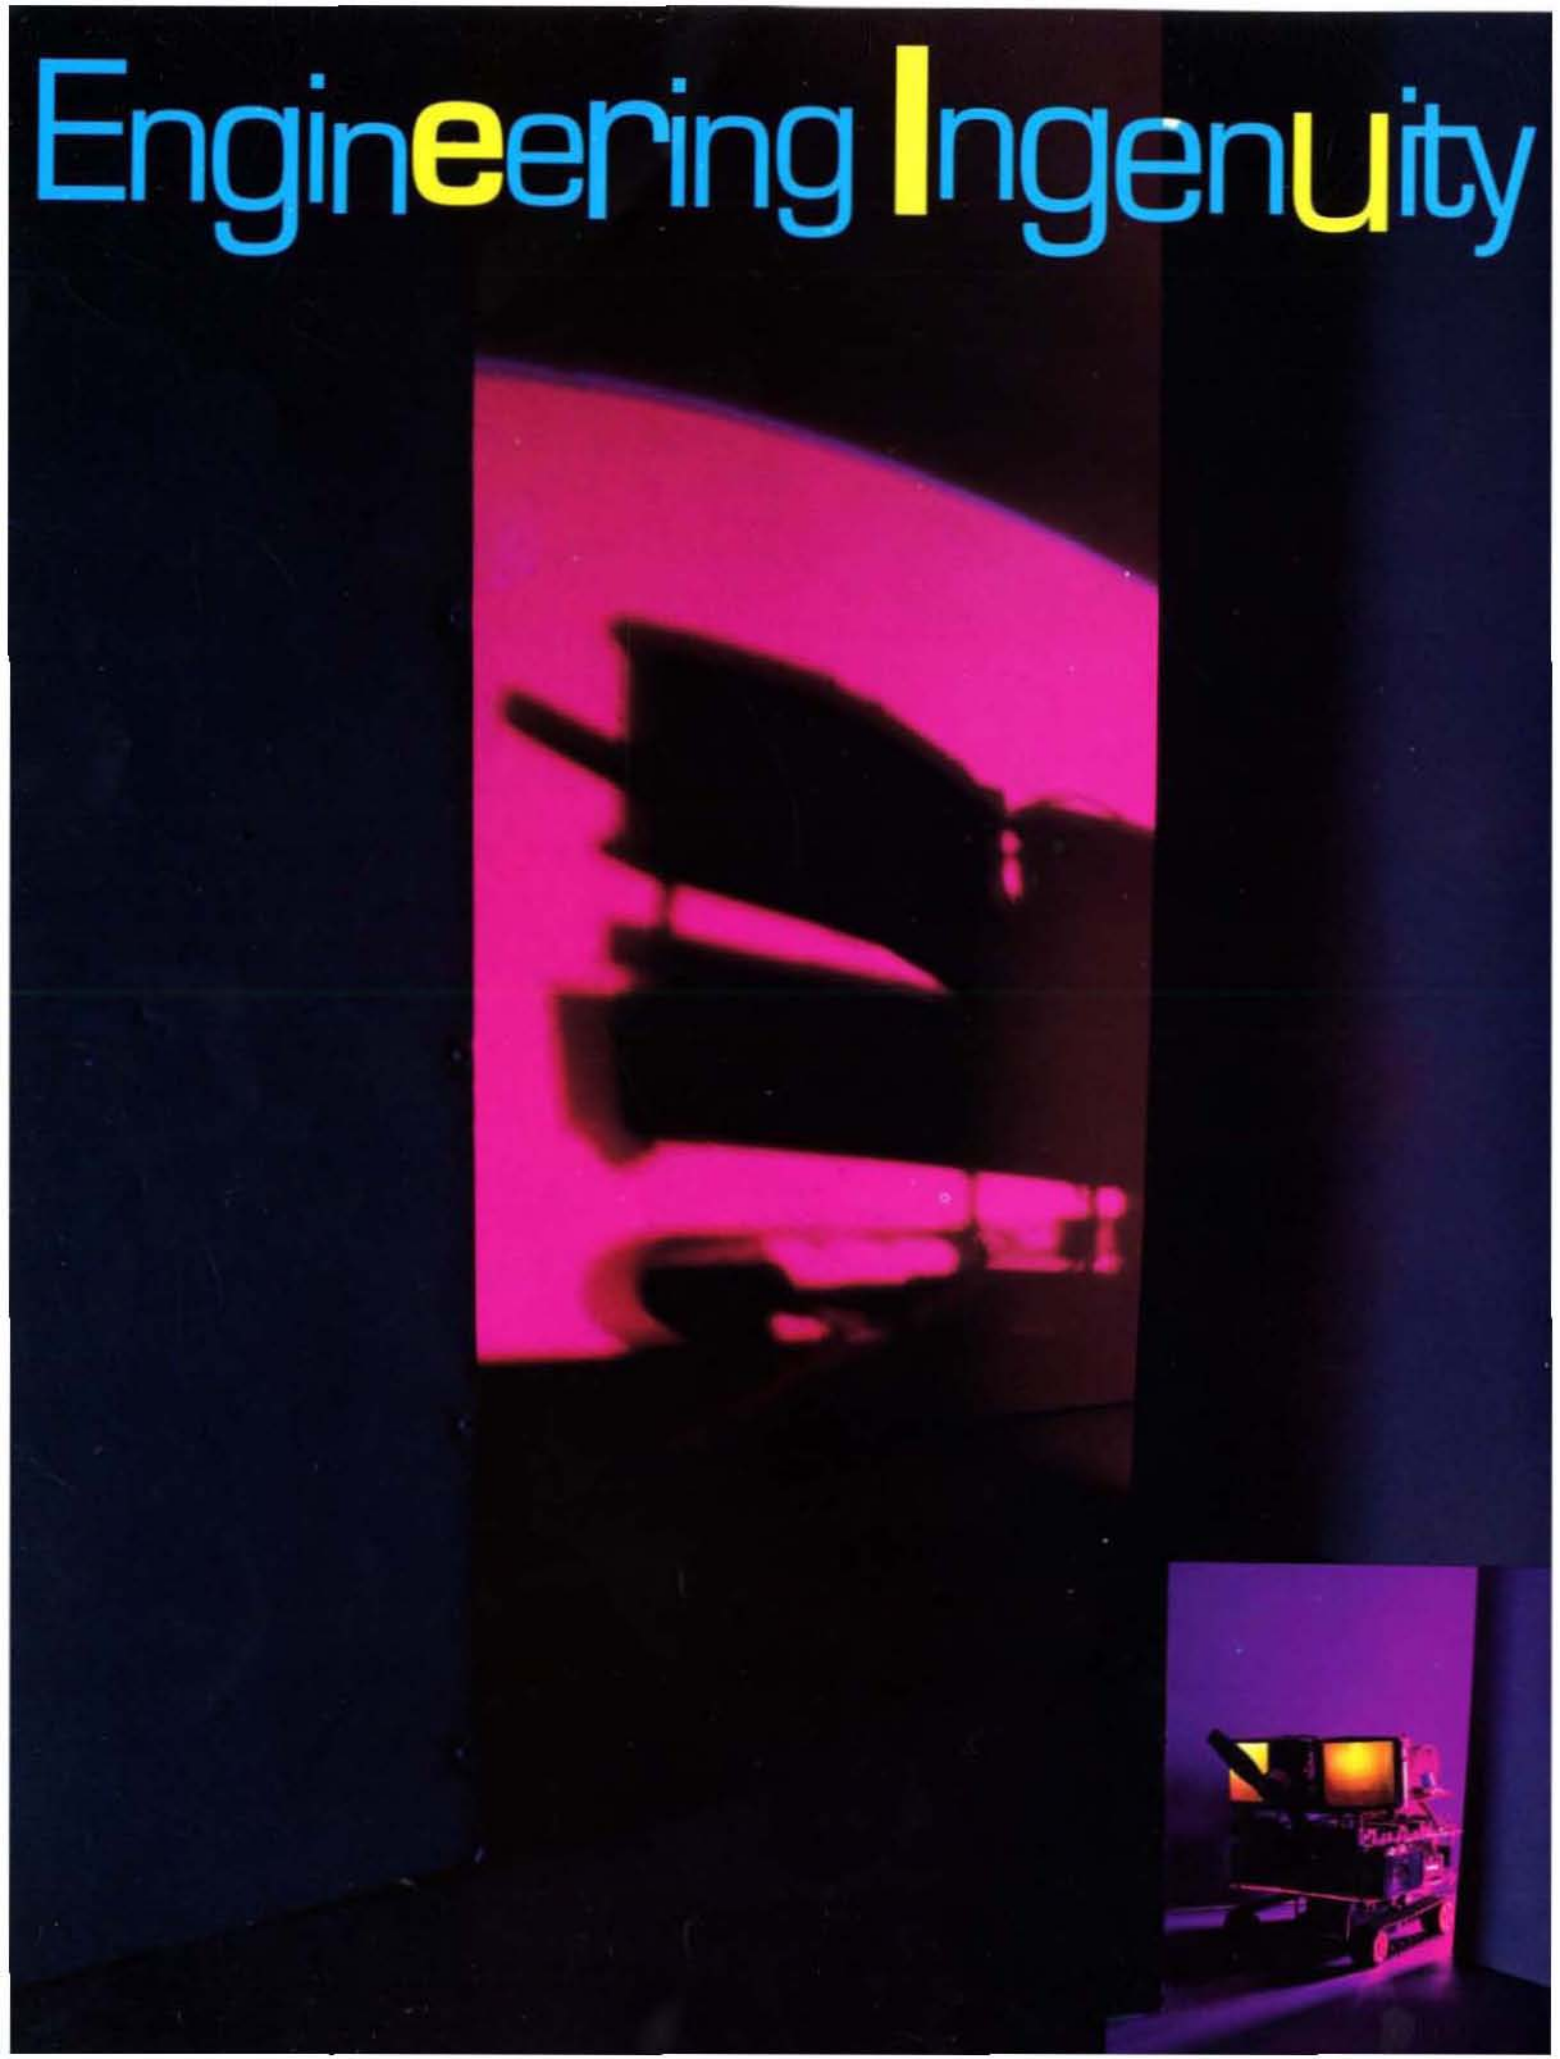
Their work experience and travels have even helped the Bloughs establish careers. Valerie works for a Japanese trading company in Michigan; Hudson, who owns a tree business in Greenville, SC, does interpreting for Japanese companies; Carey engineers and also does Japanese interpreting; Vicky and here husband are missionary builders; Bea and her husband are teachers in a Russian village in Alaska; Cheyne owns and operates a commercial fishing boat; and Becky is a certified teacher.

Ron is still pastoring but no longer fishes for income. He enjoys four-wheeling in the mountains, hunting moose and taking their frequent visitors on fishing trips.

"When my wife and I were married," he says "we made it a practice not to go into debt. We decided then to trust the Lord for our needs, and they've always been supplied." ■



Engineering Ingenuity



A candle flickers in the back room of a tiny structure, casting eerie light patterns that dance on flimsy walls. Shadows in the hallway reveal a creature, neither man nor beast, making its way through a maze of halls. It crosses the doorway, darts for the candle and silently puts out the flame.

A horror movie? Hardly. Just the class project of a group of BJU engineering students–complete with a heat-sensing robot and a maze of hallways.

But you thought it was impossible to get an engineering degree and attend a Christian school at the same time, right?

Definitely not! For more than 35 years, BJU has offered engineering training and now has graduates of the program scattered around the world–some in very interesting fields.

Tim Tsuei, a 1989 grad, is a doctoral student in biomedical engineering at Duke University. Doug Durkee, a 1976 broadcast engineering grad, serves as chief engineer at NBC affiliate WYFF-TV in Greenville.

The curriculum is divided into four engineering programs: electronics, industrial electronics, broadcast engineering and engineering science/physics. The first three majors prepare students for a career with a specialized emphasis, and the last major gives students a general background, so they can specialize their field in grad school.

So you take the plunge and enroll in engineering. What comes next?

In Electronic Drafting, freshmen learn the basics of drawing instruments and report preparations. As they advance, students take classes such as Digital Electronics, Nuclear Physics, Microprocessors, Linear and Integrated Circuits and Theoretical and Applied Mechanics, depending on the major.

Be prepared for quite a few hands-on projects to help you apply your class knowledge to real-life situations. But the projects can be fun, even if challenging.

"One group of students built a miniature elevator for their class project," Mr. Greaves, engineering professor, said. "You pushed a button and the elevator would go up, down and stop on different floors just like a full-size elevator."

Projects like this may take training and skill, but they also prepare you for your career.

Architectural firms, computer companies, machine tool businesses and radio stations are just a few places that employ BJU grads.

1993 grad Paul Rude works for an international engineering firm based in Sweden. Paul's combination of an engineering major and a business minor was a perfect fit when he went on to get his MBA at the University of South Carolina. "Over half of the MBA students there are engineering grads, and most of them had to go through extensive make-up work, but I had no problem swinging right into the program," Paul says. "BJU's program prepared me well." ■

David Newcomb, Sophomore, Richmond, VA

" I looked at the courses I would need for different grad schools, and BJU offers all the courses necessary. I'm planning on going into the electronics field to work with schematics.

At BJU I can go up to a teacher and ask questions whenever I need to. I feel comfortable asking them questions, and they take time to explain their answers."

Thomas Erkens, Senior, Greenville, SC

"Most of our classes have you designing and building circuits, troubleshooting, etc. There's much hands-on application in lab where we apply what we've learned in class. For example, we're doing a project for the University where we're converting manual controls to computer controls.

The major has given me all the groundwork I need so that I can further specialize in my field."

Christina Loudermilk, Junior, Nagoya, Japan

"From the time I was little, I liked to take things apart and put them back together again, so engineering has always been very interesting to me.

Right now in lab we're working on measuring sound waves. But Microprocessors is probably my favorite class, and I also enjoy learning to design on the computer graphically."

Jason Caulder, Freshman, Orlando, FL

"I got interested in engineering by running the sound system for my church. I went to a technical school back home before I came to BJU. At that school you were left to fend for yourself, but BJU is better structured and more complete. The teachers here are actually teachers rather than just babysitters. They really show interest in the student."

The President's Corner

Until the sleeping conscience has been awakened, the mission of BJU in the life of a student has not begun. An enlightened head can be a dangerous thing apart from an awakened conscience.

The following statement made by Rev. Bradley Miner before the Boston Baptist Association, September 20, 1843, explains the problem:

"The man who addresses himself to the intellect and most of whose efforts are to enlighten men is a teacher. He who appeals to the passions is an orator. But the man who by manifestation of the truth commends himself to the conscience is a preacher. The religious teacher may be heard with profit and with profound respect. The pulpit orator with admiration and delight. But, the preacher alone speaks with authority, and the hearers do not stop at respect and admiration–they go on to conviction and exclaim, 'What shall we do?'

"The mind is a kingdom, and the conscience is the sovereign which God has enthroned to bear rule over all the other faculties; but, all the other faculties and passions have risen in rebellion against the conscience and dethroned it, each in its turn bears rule in the soul. The first object of preaching is to aid conscience in resuming the throne, and until this be accomplished, the soul is an empire in rebellion against God, and in a state of anarchy and civil war within itself."

Preaching has always been paramount at BJU. The chapel pulpit is the focus. It is there, upon the anvil of God's Word, that the soul leaves its rebellion against God when it exclaims, "What shall I do, Lord?"

"The foolishness of preaching" is still God's way to have His way with us. Respect of preaching and of the preacher whose life deserves respect may be largely disappearing in the land, but not at Bob Jones University. God's way of awakening the conscience is still the right way–through preaching.

Pastors who are specialists in counseling or administration will always have their place, but they can never take the place of the preacher. Training preachers is the thing Bob Jones University does best. It is certainly the thing we love most.

The spiritual pressure preaching brings upon the soul leans it in God's direction so that He becomes the one the soul delights in and all other desires fade in comparison. No wonder the Founder of Bob Jones University said the best advice he ever got when founding the school was to "keep the chapel platform hot." ■

Not to toot

Argyle Paddock has taught trumpet at BJU for more than 35 years. His performing experience includes several years with the United States Air Force Band in San Antonio, Texas. He received his B.A. and his M.A. from BJU and his M.Ed. from Western Michigan University, studying under Leonard Meretta. In addition to his musical talents, Argyle is fluent in Spanish and directs the BJU summer Mexico Mission Team.

Since 1983 tuba player Dan Turner has served as conductor of the BJU Symphonic Band. He received his M.S. and Ed.D. from the University of Illinois after obtaining his B.S. in music education from BJU. He has conducted band clinics and festivals in twelve states and is principal tuba with the Anderson Chamber Orchestra.

Paul Overly earned his D.Mus. in trombone performance at Florida State University in 1990, studying with John Drew. He received both his B.Mus. and M.M. from BJU and won the state, divisional and national collegiate brass auditions of the Music Teachers National Association in 1984-85. He also studied under John Marcellus and performed with both the Tallahassee and Greenville Symphonies.

A member of the International Horn Society, Jeanette Ferkel directs the University Horn Ensemble and plays in various brass groups. She received her B.S. in music education from BJU and her M.A. from Ohio State University, and she studied under Nicholas Perrini, Brice Andrus, and Martin Hackleman. She also performs with the Anderson Chamber Orchestra and the Greenville Chorale Orchestra.

An outstanding trumpet soloist, Dan Kirsop played with the Greenville Symphony Orchestra for five years. Currently principal and solo trumpet with the Anderson Chamber Orchestra, Dan received his B.S. in music education and his M.A. in trumpet performance from BJU. In addition to private teaching, he trains BJU summer ministry teams.

Bruce Cox recently completed coursework for the D.M.A. degree in trumpet performance and pedagogy from the University of Southern Mississippi. He received his M.S. from the University of Illinois and his B.S. from BJU. A member of the International Trumpet Guild, Bruce has performed with the Greenville Symphony Orchestra, the Southern Arts Brass Quintet and the Meridian Symphony Orchestra.

Paul Jantz, head of the BJU Brass Department, received his B.S. in music education and M.A. in sacred music from BJU. Further education has included private study with Ron Barron, principal trombone with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Paul plays trombone in the Anderson (SC) Chamber Orchestra and frequently performs with the BJU Symphony Orchestra.

Seventy-six trombones led the big parade, with 110 cornets…well, our numbers are a bit smaller, but with seven full-time faculty, the Lord has blessed BJU with more brass faculty than most Christian colleges and many secular institutions as well. All are involved in the music programs of their local churches, and five members make up the Foundation Brass Quintet and perform all over the East and Midwest.

A Work of

Joseph Sold by his Brethren by Giovanni Battista Carlone, 1592-1677

"One of the most remarkable collections of Italian painting that exists anywhere, and certainly the very best in America."

"No question, Bob Jones has the best Baroque art around."

"The finest collection of religious art in America."

Needless to say, the critics are impressed with the some 400 works that make up the BJU Art Gallery—and have been for more than 40 years.

With works dating back as far as the 1300s, the Gallery of Sacred Art is more than just a history exhibit. It's an inspiring collection of paintings and artifacts that take visitors back through the development of the church and religion across Europe from the 14th through 19th centuries. And every year the gallery draws thousands of visitors, including tourists from foreign countries.

Everything in the gallery has been acquired under the watchful eye of Dr. Bob Jones, Jr., who started purchasing pieces on a shoestring budget in the late 1940s.

"I thought we ought to have an art gallery because of our emphasis on the fine arts," Dr. Bob says. "An art gallery is like a library, and at the suggestion of an old friend who had been a collector, we went to work on it. It is one of the finest means of promotion that the University has. Of course, the real advantage of having a museum is to help the students become acquainted with great painting, and to develop an appreciation for it. It will enrich their lives."

The gallery contains 30 rooms displaying more than 400 works by famous artists such as Rembrandt, Botticelli, Tintoretto, Van Dyck and Rubens.

"Mattia Preti's Christ Seats the Child in the Midst of the Disciples is the first painting by this important Neopolitan artist to be hung in an American museum," Dr. Bob says. "Today, his paintings are perhaps more in demand in America than any other Baroque artist—with prices to match."

Artists from many countries are represented, including France, Italy Germany and Spain. "Ribera's Head of Christ is the finest example of the subject by this Spanish artist, who worked in Italy and is regarded as one of the three most important Spanish painters," Dr. Bob says.

The collection's Baroque works are the most famous, but the gallery is well-represented in other schools, such as the 15th and early 16th century Flemish and Dutch paintings, and early gold background Italian altarpieces. The large painted crucifix is one of the prime examples in America of this type painting of the period.

Besides the paintings, the gallery houses collections of Russian icons, Renaissance furniture, sculpture, vestments made for the Imperial Chapel in Vienna, and the Bowen Biblical Lands Museum.

The gallery rooms were actually built around the paintings, allowing for a harmony between setting and art that accentuates the paintings. The University has made many of its own frames to complement the works.

The end result? As critic William Allen said in Art Voices magazine, "The splendor of Europe's palaces is recaptured here...a majority of visitors will find themselves thunderstruck at first, having never before seen anything like this." ■

College Financing Tips

As the world's definition of Christmas shows itself in stores as Jolly Old St. Nicholas and "Half-Off-Last-Chance-Christmas-Sales," even Christian moms and dads and grandmas and grandpas can't help planning ahead about gifts for their children and grandchildren. Yet, how far ahead are they planning in their gifts?

BJU's Turn-of-the-Century Club offers parents and grandparents a chance to pay for their children's or grandchildren's college education at today's prices.

If you consider the fact that the cost of college tuition increases at an alarming rate of five to ten percent a year, you realize that this is an incredible savings.

In 2007, a year of tuition, room and board at BJU might cost nearly $20,000. It's no wonder the cost of a college education is one of the fastest growing expenses facing today's families!

If your son, daughter, or grandchild will be entering college between the years of 1998 and 2007, the Club allows you to pay for one, two, three, or all four years of their education in lump-sum, semi-annual, quarterly, or monthly payments, while locking in today's rates.

Also, if you have more than one child or grandchild in your family who is eligible for the Club plan, you may pay for their membership as well.

If, for any reason, your child or grandchild is unable to attend BJU, every penny of your investment will be refunded. So, there's nothing to lose, except time, if you wait.

Join the Turn-of-the-Century Club today and give junior the best gift of all…a promising future.

If you would like a brochure with complete information about the Turn-of-the-Century Club and payment schedules, just fill out the response card in the middle of the BJU Review or call us at (803) 242-5100, ext. 3020. ■

Buy one for your favorite lumberjack

OK, so flannel shirts have become popular with quite a few more people than lumberjacks and outdoorsy types. But these warm Adirondack 100% soft cotton flannel hooded pullovers, available in St. Regis plaid (blue) or Cumberland plaid (wine), will certainly be a hit with any Paul Bunyans on your Christmas list.

Sized in large and extra-large at $29.95 each.

And you thought taking a stand in America was hard.

Follow Dimitri Yurchenko as he learns what it means to take a stand in pre-glasnost Russia. The Printing is a fast-moving, hard-hitting film produced by Bob Jones University about Russian Christians struggling to print Bibles despite persecution from the KGB. Their compelling story of determination amidst torture, prison and intimidation will motivate the sleepy, indifferent Christian to take a stand for right. Enjoy the drama and let the message stir your spirit.

For a limited time, The Printing is available on videotape for only $29.95, plus shipping & handling. Or, for even greater savings, order the set of all 5 Unusual Films' feature-length films for $100 plus shipping & handling.
